

Success Story

Kathryn was always a good and successful student. She actually learned to read at an early age & made very good grades. It breaks my heart to know how very difficult it was for her. She apparently was having to work 10x harder than the average student to compensate for severe vision problems.

We took her to the optometrist because she would complain that she couldn't see - she also had a lot of headaches and nausea. #

The optometrist couldn't even complete the evaluation because her level of focus changed constantly. He referred us to Vision Therapy.

Kathryn had double-vision, eye-teaming and focusing problems.

After therapy we have seen a dramatic change. She reads for long periods of time, the headaches are gone - she doesn't even need glasses for near-sightedness.

Kathryn was/is such a "high-achiever" type student, that she was using compensation techniques like suppressing one eye, oral learning, and memorization. She didn't know that learning wasn't supposed to be so hard.

Therapy has made a huge difference. She is ^{now} ready to tackle the demands of middle school and beyond.
